

I am concerned about the news I hear about not requiring telephone companies to share their networks.

I am of the opinion based on my own experience with getting broadband services that the Telcos have never lived up to the spirit of the law to begin with, hence the failure of the many dsl providers.

The network infrastructure was inherited from ATT to begin with mandating competitors to build another would be asking the impossible.

I use an alternative dsl provider because the telcos refuse to offer consumers the choices they want.

If they are allowed to close off their networks, choices will be even less.
